Pastor's Word: "Cross-generational Communication "

I'm not certain that the term Cross-generational Communication is often used in common conversation but it does represent a challenge to our current society on a daily basis. We all find ourselves interacting with persons that are of significant age difference from ourselves. As a result, the older generations are forced into understanding and respecting the thinking, culture, technology, and ideas of a younger generation quite different from themselves. The younger generations have a similar need to respect and appreciate the experience and wisdom that only a lifetime of years can provide.

One of my sons, Micah (简叔恩) , has just found a new job working in technology. Talking with him about the nature of the job and the fact that he'd be doing everything remotely sounded a bit like he was "speaking an alien language to this old man!" Certainly, I "understand-ish" what he is going to be doing but the bottom line is that our world is changing and so are the approaches and needs of many things in our society. As a 30+ year old, my son is no longer just a "son" of my wife and I but he is an adult of his own generation! I can hope that his decisions and Christian character guide his actions but I can't spend my time trying to function as a parent to a grown man. No, this isn't easy to release but the fact is that trying to hold on to influencing his decisions without his request for assistance or input is simply not realistic. Indeed, my attempts to help or guide his thoughts now may well be lost on him.

I'm so thankful that I can still remember the relationship that my mother and I had when I was younger. Just like with my son, sometimes I smiled and listened to my mother but that "listening" didn't really mean I was going to do all my mother suggested! Yep, I was just like my son and, while I respected my mother, a young adult is still an adult...not a child!

In Scripture, we can see that Jesus was in his younger 30s as he reached out to people of varying ages and varying educational levels. He may have been, to some people, a young person but His age limited NOT His vital ministry. Let us worry less about differences in our generations and seek to learn from all those around us...regardless of age!
